The City of Clayton is the County Seat of St. Louis County and is known as the second downtown of the St. Louis area. In 1876 The City of St. Louis split off from the County and a new location for the County Seat that was not more than a half days ride from the city of St. Louis was searched for. Ralph Clayton donated 104 acres to the county for the new County Seat if the area would be called by his name. These 104 acres are now the area of the main business district. The City of Clayton is known for its bustling business district, and its pleasant residential areas.
